

Abstract

A method and system for identifying representative data trends using sketches. A sketch is a lower dimensional vector used to represent higher dimensional data. The properties of sketches include data dimensionality reduction, sketches synthesized from other sketches, and the distance between sketches comparable to the distance between the data the sketches represent. Exemplary embodiments include identifying relaxed periods and average trends.